

About Snyder Knives: The Story of a Legacy

Snyder Knives was founded on the values of family, passion, and tradition. Behind each blade is the story of its founder—a fourth-generation farmer and rancher whose life has been shaped by hard work, craftsmanship, and a deep respect for heritage.

Growing up on a family farm, he learned early the value of precision and attention to detail—skills that would later become the foundation of his craft. His fascination with knives began in childhood, inspired by his grandfather, an avid knife collector. That early spark ignited a lifelong passion for the artistry and utility of fine blades.

The journey into professional knife making deepened with the mentorship of Keith Murr, a master knife maker who trained under the legendary Bob Dozier. Under Keith's guidance, he mastered the timeless techniques of the trade, learning to create knives that are both beautiful and functional. Each lesson was a step toward refining his craft and developing a distinct style rooted in tradition but always striving for innovation.

Today, Snyder Knives represents more than just craftsmanship—it embodies legacy. Every knife is made with a commitment to quality, meant to last for generations. These are not just tools; they are heirlooms, forged with care, integrity, and purpose.

SNYDER KNIVES

Together with his wife, he continues to raise their children on the farm, grounded in faith, family, and the enduring values that inspire every Snyder blade. With each piece, they aim to craft a lasting legacy—knives built not just for use, but for stories yet to be told.
